do three other things that need her attention. She hasn't had time today to buy a birthday present for her boyfriend, whose birthday is the day after tomorrow. She hasn't had time either to make an appointment with the dentist to repair a crown that broke yesterday. Finally, she hasn't had time to do the most important thing, which is to talk to François Monet, the young man from Paris whom she met in the car accident two weeks ago. He left a message on her mobile phone this morning while she was in one of the meetings in the law firm. She's tried to call him three times today, but his line has been busy all day. She's spoken to him twice since the accident and he's invited her to Paris. She spent three days in Paris with her parents when she was 11 years old, but since then, she hasn't had the opportunity to go back. She's been thinking a lot about François in the last two weeks and she's made the decision to start learning French. She hasn't told her boyfriend anything yet.

Inés García has had a difficult day today. She's attended two meetings with her colleagues in the law firm, she's gone to the courthouse twice to defend two different labor cases and she's given a lecture on labor law to first-year law students at the University of Seville. She's had to do all these things in a period of 8 hours. Because of this, she hasn't had time to
